Sadako and The Thousand Paper Cranes is about a girl named Sadako Sasaki who was two years old when a atom bomb had dropped in her hometown of Hiroshima. Ten years later she had an illness called leukemia. Her friend came over to visit her at the hospital. She said that if a person that is sick can fold a thousand paper cranes, the gods will make them well again.

At the end, Sadako had folded six hundred forty-four paper cranes; and she died on October 25, 1955. After her death her classmates made the rest of the paper cranes to make Sadako's wish come true. There is a statue of her with this inscription, this is our cry, this is our prayer; peace in the world. [This is a real story].

Then one day Edward and his family go on a cruise, and then two bullies are teasing the girl that owns Edward. The bullies grab Edward and throw him overboard. Edward sunk to the bottom. He stayed at the bottom of the sea for months. A fisher then brings Edward up with a net. The fisher then brought him home to his wife. She sees how torn up Edward is. His clothes were torn off and his fur was going away. The wife made Edward some cloths. But she thought Edward was a girl so she made him a dress. But then her niece grabbed Edward and when she was taking out the trash, she went to the dump and the niece threw Edward in the dump. Edward stayed in the dump for many nights he was buried under trash. Then a dog found him and brought him back to his master, which was a homeless man that traveled where the boxcar traveled. The homeless man didn't like the dress on Edward so he made a shirt out of old rags. For the first time Edward actually cared for the homeless man. Edward stayed with the homeless man for many years until one night a cop caught the homeless man in the boxcar with Edward. The cop grabbed Edward and threw him off a cliff. The next day an old lady found Edward and used him as a scarecrow, but he wasn't a good scarecrow. Then a young boy forced to work for the old lady grabbed Edward and took him home. He gave him to his sister, which is ill. The girl soon died and the boy's dad didn't like him so the boy has to live on the streets. Then one into a diner and gets some food, the boy cant pay for the food so the chef grabs Edward breaks his head on the table. When Edward wakes up he notices that he is fixed up and is in a toystore. After weeks passed an old doll tells him not to give up hope, but then months passed and no one bought Edward. Then on a rainy night a girl comes in and sees Edward. Guess who bought Edward? Read the book to find out!
